Tableau In January

January, noon. The idle length of a street …
There is more light than world, and what few outlines
Persist forget their meaning in the heat.

The metal sea's too bright to walk upon.
Thoughts pass, and figment shops, and random glimmers
From crystals in the concrete, and oiled swimmers.
The sky does not exist when it's outshone.

On the dazed white sand, umbrellas stiffly lean
To pose and impose their shade upon the shifting Languor of bodies and glare, and all the sifting Motes of dim music mingled with the scene
Fade into summer, January, drifting …

Things drift apart, significances fade.
The returning street, once blue, is taut with azure
Tension between persistence and erasure.
In the cool of doorways, shirts drink lemonade.

January, noon. The unreal, idle street.
There is more light than world. The poet, smiling, Takes his soft lines and bends them till they meet.

from The Ilex Tree (1965)
Cave Divers near Mount Gambier

Chenille-skinned people are counting under the countryside on resurrections by truck light off among the pines.

Here in the first paddocks, where winter comes ashore, mild duckweed ponds are skylights of a filled kingdom and what their gaze absorbs may float up districts away. White men with scorches of hair approach that water, zip into black, upturn large flap feet and free-fall away, their mouths crammed full. Crystalline polyps of their breathing blossom for a while, as they disturb algal screens, extinct kangaroos, eels of liquorice colour then, with the portable greening stars they carry under, these vanish, as the divers undergo tight anti-births into the vaults and profound domes of the limestone. Here, approaching the heart of the poem they embody and thereby make the gliding cavern-world embody, they have to keep time with themselves, and be dull often with its daylight logic—since to dream it fully might leave them asprawl on the void clang of their tanks, their faceplates glazing an unfocused dreadful portrait at the apex of a steeple that does not reach the day.

from Dog Fox Field (1990)
The Burning Truck

It began at dawn with fighter planes:
they came in off the sea and didn't rise, they leaped the sandbar one and one and one coming so fast the crockery they shook down off my kitchen shelves was spinning in the air
when they were gone.

They came in off the sea and drew a wave of lagging cannon-shells across our roofs.
Windows spat glass, a truck took sudden fire, out leaped the driver, but the truck ran on,
growing enormous, shambling by our street-doors,
coming and coming ...

By every right in town, by every average
we knew of in the world, it had to stop, fetch up against a building, fall to rubble from pure force of burning, for its whole body and substance were consumed with heat but it would not stop.

And all of us who knew our place and prayers
clutched our verandah-rails and window-sills, begging that truck between our teeth to halt,
keep going, vanish, strike ... but set us free.
And then we saw the wild boys of the street go running after it.

And as they followed, cheering, on it crept, windsheild melting now, canopy-frame a cage torn by gorillas of flame, and it kept on over the tramlines, past the church, on past the last lit windows, and then out of the world with its disciples.

from The Ilex Tree (1965)
Spring Hail

This is for spring and hail, that you may remember:
for a boy long ago, and a pony that could fly.

We had huddled together a long time in the shed
in the scent of vanished corn and wild bush birds, and then the hammering faltered, and the torn cobwebs ceased their quivering and hung still from the nested rafters. We became uneasy at the silence that grew about us, and came out.

The beaded violence had ceased. Fresh-minted hills smoked, and the heavens swirled and blew away.
The paddocks were endless again, and all around leaves lay beneath their trees, and cakes of moss.
Sheep trotted and propped, and shook out ice from their wool.
The hard blue highway that had carried us there fumed as we crossed it, and the hail I scooped from underfoot still bore the taste of sky and hurt my teeth, and crackled as we walked.

This is for spring and hail, that you may remember
a boy long ago, and a pony that could fly.

With the creak and stop of a gate, we started to trespass:
my pony bent his head and drank up grass
while I ate ice, and wandered, and ate ice.
There was a peach tree growing wild by a bank and under it and round, sweet dented fruit weeping pale juice amongst hail-shotten leaves, and this I picked up and ate till I was filled.

I sat on a log then, listening with my skin to the secret feast of the sun, to the long wet worms at work in the earth, and, deeper down, the stones beneath the earth, uneasy that their sleep
should be troubled by dreams of water soaking down, and I heard with my ears the creek on its bed of mould moving and passing with a mothering sound.

This is for spring and hail, that you may remember
a boy long ago on a pony that could fly.
My pony came up then and stood by me, waiting to be gone. The sky was now spotless from dome to earth, and balanced there on the cutting-edge of mountains. It was time to leap to the saddle and go, a thunderbolt whirling sheep and saplings behind, and the rearing fence that we took at a bound, and the old, abandoned shed forgotten behind, and the paddock forgotten behind. Time to shatter peace and lean into spring as into a battering wind, and be rapidly gone.

It was time, high time, the highest and only time to stand in the stirrups and shout out, blind with wind for the height and clatter of ridges to be topped and the racing downward after through the lands of floating green and bridges and flickering trees. It was time, as never again it was time to pull the bridle up, so the racketing hooves fell silent as we ascended from the hill above the farms, far up to where the hail formed and hung weightless in the upper air, charting the birdless winds with silver roads for us to follow and be utterly gone.

This is for spring and hail, that you may remember a boy and a pony long ago who could fly.

from The Ilex Tree (1965)
The Sleepout

Childhood sleeps in a verandah room
in an iron bed close to the wall where the winter over the railing swelled the blind on its timber boom and splinters picked lint off warm linen and the stars were out over the hill;

then one wall of the room was forest
and all things in there were to come.

Breathings climbe
d up on the verandah
when dark cattle rubbed at the corner and sometimes dim towering rain stood for forest, and the dry cave hunched woollen.

Inside the forest was lamplit along tracks to a starry creek bed
and beyond lay the never-fenced country, its full billabongs all surrounded by animals and birds, in loud crustings,

and sometimes kept leaping up amongst them.
And out there, to kindle whenever dark found it, hung the daylight moon.

from The Daylight Moon, 1987
Midnight Lake\(^1\)

Little boy blue, four hours till dawn.
Your bed's a cement bag, your plastic is torn.

Your breakfast was tap water, dinner was sleep;
you are the faith your olds couldn't keep.

In your bunny rug room there were toys on the floor
but nothing is obvious when people get poor and newspaper crackles next to your skin.

You're a newspaper fairytale now, Tommy Thin,

a postnatal abortion, slick outer space thing,
you run like a pinball BING! smack crack BING!

then, strung out and spotty, you wriggle and sigh
and kiss all the fellows and make them all die.

from Dog Fox Field (1990)

\(^1\) An allusion to “Homeless”, a song by the South African group Ladysmith Black Mambazo: “Homeless, homeless / Moonlight sleeping on a midnight lake.”
The Tin Wash Dish

Lank poverty, dank poverty,
its pants wear through at fork and knee.
It warms its hands over burning shames, refers to its fate as Them and He and delights in things by their hard names:
rag and toejam, feed and paw—
don't guts that down, there ain't no more!
Dank poverty, rank poverty,
it hums with a grim fidelity
like wood-rot with a hint of orifice, wt newspaper jammed in the gaps of artifice,
and disgusts us into fierce loyalty.
It's never the fault of those you love:
Poverty comes down from above.
Let it dance chairs and smash the door,
It arises from all that went before
And every outsider's the enemy—
Jesus Christ turned this over with his stick
And knights and philosophers turned it back.
Rank poverty, lank poverty,
chafe in its crotch and sores in its hair,
still a window's clean if it's made of air,
not webby silver like a sleeve.
Watch out if this does well at school and has to leave and longs to leave:
someone, sometime, will have to pay.
Shave with toilet soap, run to flesh, astound the nation, rule the army,
still you wait for the day you'll be sent back where books or toys on the floor are rubbish and no one's allowed to come and play because home calls itself a shack and hot water crinkles in the tin wash dish.

from Dog Fox Field (1990)
Noonday Axeman

Axe-fall, echo and silence. Noonday silence.
Two miles from here, it is the twentieth century:
cars on the bitumen, powerlines vaulting the farms.
Here, with my axe, I am chopping into the stillness.

Axe-fall, echo and silence. I pause, roll tobacco, twist a cigarette, lick it. All is still.
I lean on my axe. A cloud of fragrant leaves hangs over me moveless, pierced everywhere by sky.

Here, I remember all of a hundred years:
candleflame, still night, frost and cattle bells,
the draywheels’ silence in our ears,\(^2\)
and the first red cattle spreading through the hills and my great-great-grandfather here with his first sons, who would grow old, still speaking with his Scots accent, having never seen those highlands that they sang of.

a hundred years. I stand and smoke in the silence.

A hundred years of clearing, splitting, sawing,
a hundred years of timbermen, ringbarkers,\(^3\) fencers and women in kitchens, stoking loud iron stoves year in, year out, and singing old songs to their children have made this silence human and familiar no farther than where the farms rise into foothills, and, in that time, how many sought their graves

or fled to the cities, maddened by this stillness?

Things are so wordless. These two opposing scarves
I have cut in my red-gum squeeze out jewels of sap and stare. And soon, with a few more axe-strokes, the tree will grow troubled, tremble, shift its crown and, leaning slowly, gather speed and colossally crash down and lie between the standing trunks.

And then, I know, of the knowledge that led my forebears to drink and black rage and wordlessness, there will be silence.

After the tree falls, there will reign the same silence
as stuns and spurs us, enraptures and defeats us, as seems to some a challenge, and seems to others
to be waiting here for something beyond imagining.

---

\(^2\) Draywheel: (Australian) a dray is a two-wheeled cart, used for delivering heavy loads.

\(^3\) Ringbark: v. to remove rings of bark from a tree in order to kill it. Ringbarking is used to clear large areas of woodland.
Axe-fall, echo and silence. Unhuman silence.
A stone cracks in the heat. Through the still twigs, radiance stings at my eyes. I rub a damp brow with a handkerchief and chop on into the stillness. Axe-fall and echo.

The great mast murmurs now. The scarves in its trunk crackle and squeak now, crack and increase as the hushing weight of high branches heels outward, and commences tearing and falling, and the collapse is tremendous.

Twigs fly, leaves pass puff and subside. The severed trunk slips off its stump and drops upon its shadow.
And then there is no more. The stillness is there as ever. And I fall to lopping branches.

Axe-fall, echo and silence. It will be centuries before many men are truly at home in this country, and yet, there have always been some, in each generation, there have always been some who could live in the presence of silence.

And some, I have known them, men with gentle broad hands,
who would die if removed from these unpeopled places,
some again I have seen, bemused and shy in the cities,
you have built against silence, dumbly trudging through noise past the railway stations, looking up through the traffic at the smoky halls, dreaming of journeys, of stepping down from the train at some upland stop to recover the crush of dry grass underfoot, the silence of trees.

Axe-fall, echo and silence. Dreaming silence. Though I myself run to the cities, I will forever be coming back here to walk, knee-deep in ferns, up and away from this metropolitan century, to remember my ancestors, axemen, dairymen, horse-breakers, now coffined in silence, down with their beards and dreams, who, unwilling or rapt, despairing or very patient, made what amounts to a human breach in the silence, made of their lives the rough foundations of legends—men must have legends, else they will die of strangeness—then died in their turn, each after his own fashion, resigned or agonized, from silence into great silence.

Axe-fall, echo and axe-fall. Noonday silence. Though I go to the cities, turning my back on these hills, for the talk and dazzle of the cities, for the sake of belonging for months and years at a time to the twentieth century, the city will never quite hold me. I will be always coming back here on the up-train, peering, leaning out of the window to see, on far-off ridges the sky between the trees, and over the racket of the rails to hear the echo and the silence.

I shoulder my axe and set off home through the stillness.

from The Ilex Tree (1965)

---

4 Horsebreaker: A type of horse trainer. To “break” a horse is to teach it to draw or carry.
As Country Was Slow

Our new motorway
is a cross-country fort
and we reinforcements
speed between earthworks
water-sumps and counterscarps, breaking out on wide glimpses,
flapping the overpasses—

Little paper lanterns
march up and down dirt, wrapped round three chopsticks plastic shrub-guards grow bushes
to screen the real bush, to hide old towns
behind sound-walls and green—

Wildlife crossings underneath the superglued pavement are jeep size; beasts must see nature restart beyond.
The roads are our nature
shining beyond delay, fretting to race on—

Any check in high speed
can bleed into gravel
and hang pastel wreaths over roadside crosses.
Have you had your scare yet?—
It made you a driver
not an ever-young name.

We're one Ireland, plus at least six Great Britains welded around Mars
and cross-linked by cars—Benzene, diesel, autobahn:
they're a German creation,
these private world-splicers.
The uncle who farmed our place was an Arab of his day growing fuel for the horses
who hauled the roads then.
1914 ended that. Will I see fuel crops come again?
I'll ride a slow vehicle before cars are slow
as country was slow.

from Taller When Prone (2010)

“The Rabbiter and his Family” (1938) is by Australian artist Russell Drysdale.

This painting was chosen by Les Murray to accompany “The Tin Wash Dish” in an exhibition at the National Gallery of Australia.
Lament for the Country Soldiers

The king of honour, louder than of England, cried on the young men to a gallant day
and ate the hearts of those who would not go for the gathering ranks were the Chosen Company that each man in his lifetime seeks, and finds,

some for an hour, some beyond recall.

When to prove their life, they set their lives at risk and in the ruins of horizons died one out of four, in the spreading rose of their honour

they didn't see the badge upon their hat was the ancient sword that points in all directions.
The symbol hacked the homesteads even so.

The static farms withstood it to the end,
the galloping telegrams ceasing, the exchanges
ringing no more in the night of the stunned violin,

and in the morning of insult, the equal remember ribaldry, madness, the wire jerking with friends, ironic salutes for the claimants of the fox-hunt

as, camped under tin like rabbiters in death's gully, they stemmed the endless weather of grey men and steel and, first of all armies, stormed into great fields.

But it was a weight beyond speech, the proven nation,
on beasts and boys. Newborn experiment withered.
Dull horror rotting miles wide in the memory of green.

Touching money, the white feather crumpled to ash,
cold lies grew quickly in the rank decades
as, far away, the ascendant conquered courage, and we debauched the faith we were to keep

with the childless singing on the morning track, the Sportsmen's Thousand leaping on the mountains,
now growing remote, beneath their crumbling farms,
in the district light, their fading companies with the king of honour, deeper than of England

though the stones of increase glitter with their names.

from Poems Against Economics (1972)
Flowering Eucalypt in Autumn

That slim creek out of the sky
the dried-blood western gum tree is all stir in its high reaches:

its strung haze-blue foliage is dancing points down in breezy mobs, swapping pace and place in an all-over sway

retarded en masse by crimson blossom.
Bees still at work up there tack around their exploded furry likeness

and the lawn underneath's a napped rug of eyelash drift, of blooms flared like a sneeze in a redheaded nostril, minute urns, pinch-sized rockets knocked down by winds, by night-creaking fig-squirting bats, or the daily parrot gang with green pocketknife wings.

Bristling food tough delicate raucous life, each flower comes

as a spray in its own turned vase, a taut starbust, honeyed model of the tree's fragrance crisping in your head.

When the japanese plum tree was shedding in spring, we speculated there among the drizzling petals

what kind of exquisitely precious artistic bloom might be gendered in a pure ethereal compost of petals potted as they fell.

From unpetalled gun-debris
we know what is grown continually,

a tower of fabulous swish tatters,
a map hoisted upright, a crusted riverbed with up-country show towns.

from The People's Otherworld (1983)
The Forest Hit by Modern Use

The forest, hit by modern use, stands graced with damage.

Angled plaques

tilt everywhere, with graphic needle crowns
and trinket saps fixed round their year;
vines spiderweb, flowering, over smashed intricacies; long rides appear.

Dense growths that were always underbrush expand in the light, beside bulldozers' imprinted machine-gun belts of spoor.

Now the sun's in, through breaks and jags, culled slopes are jammed with replacement; green and whipstick saplings, every one out to shade the rest to death.

Scabbed chain

feeds leaf-mould its taut rain-cold solution;
bared creeks wash gold; kingfishers hover.

There is still great height: all through the hills spared hierarchs toughen to the wind around the punk hearts that got them spared and scatter seed down the logging roads.

Grease-fungi, scrolls, clenched pipes of bark:
the forest will now be kept like this for a long time. There are rooms in it and, paradox for mystery, birds too tiny, now that we see them, for their amplitude and carrying flash of song.

On a stump, a sea eagle eats by lengths their enemy, a coil-whipping dry land fish,
and voids white size to make room for it.

from The People's Otherworld (1983)
I am seeing this: two men are sitting on a pole they have dug a hole for and will, after dinner, raise
I think for wires. Water boils in a prune tin.
Bees hum their shift in unthinning mists of white bursaria$^5$ blossom, under the noon of wattles.$^6$

The men eat big meat sandwiches out of a styrofoam box with a handle. One is overheard saying:
drought that year. Yes. Like trying to farm the road.

The first man, if asked, would say I'm one of the Mitchells.
The other would gaze for a while, dried leaves in his palm, and looking up, with pain and subtle amusement, say I'm one of the Mitchells. Of the pair, one has been rich but never stopped wearing his oil-stained felt hat. Nearly everything they say is ritual. Sometimes the scene is an avenue.

from Ethnic Radio (1977)

---

$^5$ Bursaria: blackthorn, a thorny shrub bearing white flowers.
$^6$ Wattle: an Australian acacia with long pliant branches and cream, yellow, or golden flowers.

“Morning” by S.T. Gill (1870)
Performance

I starred that night, I shone:
I was footwork and firework in one,

a rocket that wriggled up and shot darkness with a parasol of brilliants and a peewee\(^7\) descant on a flung bit;
I was busters\(^8\) of glitter-bombs expanding to mantle and aurora from a crown,
I was fouettés,\(^9\) falls of blazing paint,
para-flares spot-welding cloudy heaven,
loose gold off fierce toeholds of white,
a finale red-tongued as a haka\(^{10}\) leap:
that too was a butt of all right!

As usual after any triumph, I was
of course, inconsolable.

from Subhuman Redneck Poems (1996)

\(^7\) Peewee: lapwing, a bird noted for its loud call. Hence “descant”.
\(^8\) Buster: cold regional wind of Southern and South East Australia.
\(^9\) Fouetté: (in ballet) a pirouette performed with a circular whipping movement of the raised leg to the side.
\(^{10}\) Haka: a ceremonial Maori dance accompanied by chanting.
Comete

Uphill in Melbourne on a beautiful day
a woman is walking ahead of her hair.
Like teak oiled soft to fracture and sway it hung to her heels and seconded her as a pencilled retinue, an unscrolling title to ploughland, edged with ripe rows of dress,
a sheathed wing that couldn't fly her at all,
only itself, loosely, and her spirits.

A largesse
of life and self, brushed all calm and out,
its abstracted attempts on her mouth weren't seen,
not its showering, its tenting. Just the detail that swam in its flow-lines, glossing about—as she paced on, comet-like, face to the sun.

from Subhuman Redneck Poems (1996)
On Home Beaches

Back, in my fifties, fatter than I was then,
I step on the sand, belch down slight horror to walk a wincing pit edge, waiting for the pistol shot laughter. Long greening waves cash themselves, foam change sliding into Ocean's pocket. She turns: ridicule looks down, strappy, with faces averted, or is glare and families.
The great hawk of the beach is outstretched, point to point, quivering and hunting. Cars are the stuff at its back.
You peer, at this age, but it's still there, ridicule, the pistol that kills women, that gets them killed, crippling men on the towel-spattered sand. Equality is dressed, neatly, with mouth still shut. Bared body is not equal ever.
Some are smiled to each other. Many surf, swim, play ball:
like that red boy, holding his wet T shirt off his breasts.

from Subhuman Redneck Poems (1996)
Pigs

Us all on sore cement was we.
Not warmed then with glares. Not glutting mush under that pole the lightning’s tied to.
No farrow-shit in milk to make us randy.
Us back in cool god-shit. We ate crisp.
We nosed up good rank in the tunnelled bush.
Us all fuckers then. And Big, huh? Tusked the balls-biting dog and gutsed him wet.
Us shoved down the soft cement of rivers.
Us snored the earth hollow, filled farrow, grunted.
Never stopped growing. We sloughed, we soughed and balked no weird till the high ridgebacks was us with weight-buried hooves. Or bristly, with milk.
Us never knowed like slitting nor hose-biff then.
Nor the terrible sheet-cutting screams up ahead.
The burnt water kicking. This gone-already feeling here in no place with our heads on upside down.

from Translations from the Natural World (1992)
Deer on the Wet Hills

As anywhere beyond the world
it is always the first day.

Smell replaces colour
for these ones, who are loved as they are red: from within.

Bed brightening into feed,
the love stays hooves on steep.

History is unforgiveness.
Terse, as their speech would be,
food-rip gets widespread.

Tuned for stealth and sudden ones' senses all point, chewing uninterest as anguish flaps one wing.

Day-streak, star-cinders.
Black sky. Pale udders forming there.

Ones' nap spooned in licks
like mutual silent sentences, bulk to mirrored bulk.

One forgets being male
right after the season.

from Translations from the Natural World (1992)
Cattle Ancestor

Darrambawli and all his wives, they came feeding from the south-east back in that first time. Darrambawli is a big red fellow, terrible fierce. He scrapes up dust, singing, whirling his bullroarers in the air: he swings them and they sing out Crack! Crack! All the time he's mounting his women, all the time more kulka, more, more, smelling their kulka and looking down his nose. Kangaroo and emu mobs run from him, as he tears up their shelters, throwing the people in the air, stamping out their fires. Darrambawli gathers up his brothers, all making that sad cry mar mar. He initiates his brothers, the Bulluktruk. They walk head down in a line and make the big blue ranges. You hear their clinking noise in there. Darrambawli has wives everywhere, he has to gallop back and forth, mad for their kulka. You see him on the coast, and on the plains. They're eating up the country, so the animals come to spear them: You have to die now, you're starving us. But then Waark the crow tells Darrambawli Your wives, they're spearing them. He is screaming, frothing at the mouth, that's why his chest is all white nowadays. Jerking two knives, he screams I make new waterholes! I bring the best song! He makes war on all that mob, raging, dotting the whole country. He frightens the water-snakes; they run away, they can't sit down. The animals forget how to speak. There is only one song for a while. Darrambawli must sing it on his own.

from Translations from the Natural World (1992)
Dead Trees in the Dam

Castle scaffolding tall in moat, the dead trees in the dam flower each morning with birds.

It can be just the three resident cormorants with musket-hammer necks, plus the clinician spoonbill, its long pout;
twilight's herons who were almost too lightfoot to land; pearl galahs in pink-fronted confederacy, each starring in its frame, or it may be a misty candelabrum of egrets lambent before saint Sleep--- who gutter awake and balance stiffly off.

Odd mornings, it's been all bloodflag and rifle green: a stopped-motion shrapnel of kingparrots. Smithereens when they freaked.

Rarely, it's wed ducks, whose children will float among the pillars. In daytime magpies sidestep up wood to jag pinnacles

and the big blow-in cuckoo crying Alarm, Alarm on the wing is not let light.
This hours after dynastic charts of high profile ibis have rowed away to beat the paddocks. Which, however green, are always watercolour, and on brown paper.

from Subhuman Redneck Poems (1996)
The Meaning of Existence

Everything except language knows the meaning of existence.
Trees, planets, rivers, time know nothing else. They express it moment by moment as the universe.

Even this fool of a body lives it in part, and would have full dignity within it but for the ignorant freedom of my talking mind.

from Poems the Size of Photographs (2002)
The Harleys

Blats booted to blatant dubbing the avenue dire with rubbings of Sveinn Forkbeard leading a black squall of Harleys with Moe Snow-Whitebeard and Possum Brushbeard and their ladies and, sphincter-lipped, gunning,

massed in leather muscle on a run,
on a roll, Santas from Hell like a whole shoal leaning wide wristed, their tautness stable

in fluency, fast streetscape dwindling, all riding astride, on the outside of sleek grunt vehicles, woman-clung, fifty years on from Marlon.

from Conscious and Verbal (1999)
Inside Ayers Rock

Inside Ayers Rock is lit with paired fluorescent lights on steel pillars supporting the ceiling of haze-blue marquee cloth
high above the non-slip pavers.
Curving around the cafeteria throughout vast inner space is a Milky way of plastic chairs in foursomes around tables
all the way to the truck drivers' enclave.
Dusted coolabah trees grow to the ceiling, TVs talk in gassy colours, and round the walls are Outback shop fronts:
the Beehive Bookshop for brochures, Casual Clobber, the bottled Country Kitchen and the sheet-iron Dreamtime Experience that is turned off at night.
A high bank of medal-ribbony lolly jars preside over island counters like opened crates,
one labelled White Mugs, and covered with them.
A two-dimensional policeman discourages shoplifting of gifts and near the entrance, where you pay for fuel, there stands a tribal man in rib-paint and pubic tassel.
It is all gentle and kind.
In beyond the children's playworld
there are fossils, like crumpled old drawings of creatures in rock.

from Subhuman Redneck Poems, 1996
An Absolutely Ordinary Rainbow

The word goes round Repins, the murmur goes round Lorenzinis,\(^{11}\)
at Tattersalls,\(^{12}\) men look up from sheets of numbers, the Stock Exchange scribblers forget the chalk in their hands and men with bread in their pockets leave the Greek Club:
There's a fellow crying in Martin Place. They can't stop him.

The traffic in George Street\(^{13}\) is banked up for half a mile and drained of motion. The crowds are edgy with talk and more crowds come hurrying. Many run in the back streets which minutes ago were busy main streets, pointing:
There's a fellow weeping down there. No one can stop him.

The man we surround, the man no one approaches simply weeps, and does not cover it, weeps not like a child, not like the wind, like a man and does not declaim it, nor beat his breast, nor even sob very loudly—yet the dignity of his weeping holds us back from his space, the hollow he makes about him in the midday light, in his pentagram of sorrow, and uniforms back in the crowd who tried to seize him stare out at him, and feel, with amazement, their minds longing for tears as children for a rainbow.

Some will say, in the years to come, a halo or force stood around him. There is no such thing.
Some will say they were shocked and would have stopped him but they will not have been there. The fiercest manhood, the toughest reserve, the slickest wit amongst us

trembles with silence, and burns with unexpected judgements of peace. Some in the concourse scream who thought themselves happy. Only the smallest children and such as look out of Paradise come near him and sit at his feet, with dogs and dusty pigeons.

Ridiculous, says a man near me, and stops his mouth with his hands, as if it uttered vomit—
and I see a woman, shining, stretch her hand and shake as she receives the gift of weeping;
as many as follow her also receive it

\(^{11}\) Repin’s Coffee Shop and Lorenzini’s Wine Bar are located in downtown Sidney. In the 1960s they were used as meeting places for many leading figures in Australian literature, and are associated with the Sidney Push.

\(^{12}\) Tattersalls: An exclusive club for Sidney businessmen

\(^{13}\) George Street: the most important street in Sidney’s financial district.
and many weep for sheer acceptance, and more refuse to weep for fear of all acceptance,
but the weeping man, like the earth, requires nothing,
the man who weeps ignores us, and cries out of his withen face and ordinary body

not words, but grief, not messages, but sorrow, hard as the earth, sheer, present as the sea—
and when he stops, he simply walks between us mopping his face with the dignity of one man who has wept, and now has finished weeping.

Evading believers, he hurries off down Pitt Street.

from The Weatherboard Cathedral (1969)
You Find You Can Leave It All

Like a charging man, hit and settling face down in the ringing,
his cause and panic obsolete,

you find you can leave it all:
your loved people, pain, achievement dwindling upstream of this raft-fall, back with the dishes that translated beasts and croplands into the ongoing self portrait your genes had mandated.

Ribbed fluorescent panels flow
over you down urgent corridors, dismissing midday outside. Slow, they'd resemble wet spade-widths in a pit:

you've left grief behind you, for others.
Your funeral: who'll know you'd re-planned it?

God, at the end of prose, somehow be our poem—
When forebrainy consciousness goes wordless selves it'd barely met inertias of rhythm, the life habit continue the battle for you.

If enough of those hold
you may wake up in this world, ache-boned, tear-sponged, dripped into:

Do you know your name? ’Yes’ won’t do.
It's Before again, with shadow. No tunnels.
You are a trunk of prickling cells.

It's the evening of some day. But it's also afterlife from here on, by that consent you found in you, to going where you went.

from Conscious and Verbal Joker as Told

Not a latch or lock could hold a little horse we had,
not a gate or paddock.

He liked to get in the house.
Walk in, and you were liable to find him in the kitchen dribbling over the table with a heap behind him

or you'd catch a hoof
right where it hurt bad
when you went in your bedroom.

He grew up with us kids,
played with us till he got rough.
Round then, they cut him,

but you couldn't ride him:
he'd bite your bum getting on,
kick your foot from the stirrup

and he could kick the spurs off your boots. Almost hopped on with you, and if he couldn't buck you he'd lie down plop! and roll in his temper, and he'd squeal.

He was from the Joker breed,
we called him Joker;
no joke much when he bit you or ate the Monday washing.

They reckon he wanted to be human, coming in the house.
I don't think so. I think he wanted something people had.
He didn't do it from love of us.

He couldn't grow up to be a full horse, and he wouldn't be a slave one.
I think he was looking for his childhood,
his foalhood and ours, when we played.

He was looking for the Kingdom of God.

from The Daylight Moon (1987)
The Dream of Wearing Shorts Forever

To go home and wear shorts forever
in the enormous paddocks, in that warm climate,
adding a sweater when winter soaks the grass,

to camp out along the river bends
for good, wearing shorts, with a pocketknife,
a fishing line and matches,

or there where the hills are all down, below the plain to sit around in shorts at evening on the plank verandah—

If the cardinal points of costume
are Robes, Tat, Rig and Scunge, where are shorts in this compass?

They are never Robes
as other bareleg outfits have been:
the toga, the kilt, the lava-lava
the Mahatma's cotton dhoti;

archbishops and field marshals
at their ceremonies never wear shorts.
The very word
means underpants in North America.

Shorts can be Tat,
Land-Rovering bush-environmental tat,
socio-political ripped-and-metal-stapled tat,
solidarity-with-the-Third-World tat tvam asi,

likewise track-and-field shorts worn to parties and the further humid, modelling negligée
of the Kingdom of Flaunt,
that unchallenged aristocracy.

More plainly climatic, shorts
are farmers' rig leathery with salt and bonemeal, are sailors' and branch bankers' rig,
the crisp golfing style
of our youngest male National Costume.
Most loosely, they are Scunge, ancient Bengal bloomers or moth-eaten hot pants worn with a former shirt, feet, beach sand, hair
and a paucity of signals.

Scunge, which is real negligée housework in a swimsuit, pyjamas worn all day,
is holiday, is freedom from ambition.
Scunge makes you invisible to the world and yourself.

The entropy of costume,
scunge can get you conquered by more vigorous cultures and help you to notice it less.

Satisfied ambition, defeat, true unconcern,
the wish and the knack for self-forgetfulness all fall within the scunge ambit wearing board shorts or similar;
it is a kind of weightlessness.

Unlike public nakedness, which in Westerners is deeply circumstantial, relaxed as exam time, artless and equal as the corsetry of a hussar regiment, shorts and their plain like
are an angelic nudity,
spirituality with pockets!
A double updraft as you drop from branch to pool!

Ideal for getting served last in shops of the temperate zone
they are also ideal for going home, into space, into time, to farm the mind's Sabine acres
for product or subsistence.

Now that everyone who yearned to wear long pants has essentially achieved them,
long pants, which have themselves been underwear repeatedly, and underground more than once, it is time perhaps to cherish the culture of shorts,
to moderate grim vigour
with the knobble of bare knees,
to cool bareknuckle feet in inland water,
slapping flies with a book on solar wind or a patient bare hand, beneath the cadjiput trees, to be walking meditatively
among green timber, through the grassy forest towards a calm sea
and looking across to more of that great island
and the further topics.

from The Daylight Moon (1987)
A Study of the Nude

Someone naked with you
will rarely be a nude.
A nude is never with just one.

Nude looks back at everyone or no one. Aubergine or bluish rose, a nude is a generalization.

Someone has given their name
and face to be face all over,
to be the face of something that isn't for caressing except with the mind's hand.

Nude is the full dress of undressing.

from Poems the Size of Photographs (2002)
The Drugs of War

On vinegar and sour fish sauce Rome's legions stemmed avalanches of whirling golden warriors whose lands furnished veterans' ranches; when the warriors broke through at last, they'd invented sour mash but they took to sugared wines and failed to hold the lands of hash.

By beat of drum in the wars of rum flogged peasant boys faced front and their warrior chiefs conversed coolly, attired for the hunt, and tobacco came in, in a pipe of peace, but joined the pipes of war as an after-smoke of battle, or over the maps before.

All alcohols, all spirits lost strength in the trenches, that belt-fed country then morphine summoned warrior dreams in ruined and would-be gentry; stewed tea and vodka and benzedrine helped quell that mechanized fury—the side that won by half a head then provided judge and jury.

In the acid war the word was Score; rising helicopters cried Smack! Smack! Boys laid a napalm trip on earth and tried to take it back but the pot boiled over in the rear; fighters tripped on their lines of force and victory went to the supple hard side, eaters of fish sauce.

The perennial war drugs are made in ourselves: sex and adrenalin, blood, and the endomorphias that transmute defeat and pain and others hardly less chemical: eagles, justice, loyalty, edge, the Judas face of every idea, and the fish that ferments in the brain.

from The Daylight Moon (1987)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Tableau In January</td>
<td>3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cave Divers near Mount Gambier</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Burning Truck</td>
<td>5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spring Hail</td>
<td>6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Sleepout</td>
<td>8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Midnight Lake</td>
<td>9</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Tin Wash Dish</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Noonday Axeman</td>
<td>11</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>As Country Was Slow</td>
<td>14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lament for the Country Soldiers</td>
<td>16</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Flowering Eucalypt in Autumn</td>
<td>18</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Forest Hit by Modern Use</td>
<td>19</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Mitchells</td>
<td>20</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Performance</td>
<td>21</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Comete</td>
<td>22</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>On Home Beaches</td>
<td>23</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pigs</td>
<td>24</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Deer on the Wet Hills</td>
<td>25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cattle Ancestor</td>
<td>26</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dead Trees in the Dam</td>
<td>27</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Meaning of Existence</td>
<td>28</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Harleys</td>
<td>29</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inside Ayers Rock</td>
<td>30</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>An Absolutely Ordinary Rainbow</td>
<td>31</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>You Find You Can Leave It All</td>
<td>33</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joker as Told</td>
<td>34</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Dream of Wearing Shorts Forever</td>
<td>35</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A Study of the Nude</td>
<td>38</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Drugs of War</td>
<td>39</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>